John Hillier, ju..., age..., twenty-two, measured six feet three inches, and weighed two hundred and fifty pounds. The five others varied in size and weight between those two. In addition to these gigantic proportions, the Hilliers were possessed of enormous physical strength and the most dauntless courage. Though often before engaged in skirmishes, this was the first time they were to take part in a battle, and of course the rest of the army were anxious to know how they would behave.

"John," said General Morgan to the elder Hillier, who, with his sons, was eating a hasty and frugal meal from off a fallen tree, "I suppose you and your brave boys would rather fight together than to be separated."

"Yes, General," said the patriot, "I think we would be of much more service to you and our noble cause when united than when parted."

"Well, John," rejoined General Morgan, "we'll have some warm work in the morning, and I am going to give you and your lads here the most dangerous position in the battle. To-morrow you shall bear the first standard into the fight, and I know that the glorious banner of our country can not be placed in better hands."

"Thank you, General, thank you for the compliment, and I and my lads will promise you this, that while we can stand and fight, or kneel and fight, you'll see them Stars and Stripes floating."

"...hen, as time is pressing move up to the ..." answered Morgan, gathering up his rein... and slowly riding away; "and remember," he continued, as his steed pranced along, impatient of the curb, "I shall keep my eyes on 'the Little Regiment!' Good night."

"Good night, General," and thus they parted.

The still hours of the night passed slowly, solemnly on. Presently, as the sun came fully above the horizon, and streamed his glowing beams over the icy hillocks, and along the field, the trumpet's shrill note sounded the enemy's advance, and the patriots had prepared for the onset.

In front of and a little apart from Morgan's force were John Hillier and his six giant sons, the father himself bearing aloft the flag, while the latter ranged themselves, three on each side of him, as a guard.

"Well done, 'Little Regiment,' exclaimed the General, as he rode down the line, encouraging his men to stand firm before the foe who were at this time rapidly approaching them.

Tarleton and his merciless cavalry, with that steady coolness and veteran determination which always have such a fatal effect upon militia. Anxiously Morgan glanced upon his undisciplined force which he noticed was already beginning to sway from side to side and waver to and fro. But ever at this moment he was unable to repress the thrill of joy which passed through him as he beheld the Hilliers, at a word from their leader coolly and deliberately draw their long

"Would to God that I had a hundred such 'Little Regiments,'" he said, between his closed teeth, "I would"—

This sentence was unfinished, for at this instant, at a signal, Tarleton's troops, clapping spurs to their steeds, charged in fearful fury.

For a moment or so the militia tottered and surged and struggled, and then breaking, fled in wild confusion, thus leaving the devoted Hilliers unsupported. Morgan expected to see the latter swept to the earth and ridden down like reeds before the tempest; but even he did not know the "Little Regiment." In a voice that was clearly heard above the din of battle, the elder Hillier, as he raised himself to his full height, shouted:

"Close up, lads, close up! Our flag! our flag forever!"

Instantly he was encircled by his sons, the herculean exertions of whom actually kept the whole force of the enemy at bay. Determined, however, to take the rebel standard, Tarleton's men raged wildly about their intended victims. Men and horses sank to the earth, till at last their bodies formed a rampart behind which the "Little Regiment," wounded and bleeding, fought like lions. Seeing at last that sabres were useless, a British dragoon now drew a pistol, and leveling it at the young John Hillier, shot him through the heart.

"Close up, lads, close up! Our flag! our flag forever!" again thundered the father, and the fearful circle was once more serried and unbroken.

By this time Morgan had succeeded in bringing up his regulars, and heading them himself, he rushed to the rescue of the noble Hilliers. But, alas! too late. A second of the Little Regiment fell, then a third, and a fourth and a fifth.

"Back to back, Ned! Our flag forever!" hoarsely commanded the elder Hillier, as he saw his fifth son sink at his feet.

For awhile Morgan's fierce assault attracted Tarleton's men. Like tigers did the patriotic commander and his h... strive to cut their way to t... heroes, and save them; ... ther-wise, and the last s... was left alone in the mi... ...ail ants.

Still, however, ... flag floated proudly ...the doomed hero, and ...l that glorious word swept below its folds ... still, as ...zy took the place of reason, Hillier shouted in wild, hoarse tones:

...a moment the giant patriot raised himself to his full height, whirled his sword aloft, and delivered his last vengeful stroke among his enemies, one of whom he cleave nearly to the saddle. Such was the force of the blow that the blade snaped asunder, leaving only the hilt in the hero's hand, who, casting this from him, sprang up, seized the starry banner that he had so long and bravely defended, and convulsively wrapping it around him, sank beneath a shower of blows, exclaiming, with a dying voice:

"Close up, lads, close up! Our flag! our flag forever!"

Unable to tear the flag from about the fallen man, the British now turned their attention to General Morgan, who, after a desperate resistance, was forced to fly. In the course of the pursuit, however, the enemy fell into irretrievable disorder, and, ever on the alert, Morgan, taking advantage of this, rallied his broken force, and charging the foe, routed them, thus re-winning the victory which he had so signally lost.

His first thought after the defeat of the enemy turned upon the brave, fated Hilliers. Surrounded by their victims, lay the seven gigantic Hilliers, about the eldest of whom was still wrapped the colors which had been committed to his care in the morning, now riddled and torn with bullets, and ...ed with the

This was his last effort, ... cally drawing his spangled and blood shroud closely around him, ... earth a corpse.

Strange is the march we tread
And strange the notes that move us on
By some bright presence led.
We struggle, in the dimness, to the goal,
Our pathway strewn with dead!

Sometimes, we catch a strain
That sweetly floats from worlds afar:
Sometimes, upon earth's plain,
We wrestle with the angels, till a gleam
Of sunless light we gain.

And then the path grows dark,
The feeble finite gropes its way
Up to the white death-mark:
Shekinah opens into cloud! ... lay—
God's hand has moored the ark.

Oh mortal nothingness!
So little of this little life
We learn; the soul we dress
In robe of varied deeds; ended the strife,
We lay the corse to rest.

So little of the fire
That burns in hearts that beat
Against our own; we tire
And faint along life's ever busy street,
Unknown, unsought, expire

It seems but yesterday,
I pressed some flowers to bear to one
I loved upon its way
The off'ring sped: too late! too late! the sun
Had twice set since he lay
In death's deep mystery!

Dead, and I dreamed it not!
Living unconscious that this woe
Was written in my lot:
To love, one day, life in its fullest glow;
The next, a sandy spot!

So little of the great
In nature's beautiful domain:
The treasures that await
The future sage and bard in earth and main:
So little of our fate.

In the unveiled to come:
So little of that land untrod:
Weak mortals frail and dumb!
Bring us unto the infinite, O God!
And take us to our home.

THE LINDEN TREE.

Here's a song for thee, of the Linden Tree!
A song of the silken Lime!
There is no other tree so pleaseth me,
No other so fit for rhyme.

When I was a boy it was all my joy
To rest in its scented shade;
When the sun was high, and the river nigh
A musical murmur made:

When, floating along like a winged song,
The traveller-bee would stop,
And choose for his bower the lime-tree flower,
And drink—to the last sweet drop.

When the evening star came forth afar
And the gnats flew round and round,
I sought for a rhyme, beneath the lime
Or dreamed on the grassy ground.

Ah!—years have fled; and the Linden dead,
Is a brand on the cutter's floor;
And the river creeps through its stony deeps,
And I—is a thought of yore.

Yet—they live again, in the dreamer's brain
As deeds of love and wrong
Which pass with a sigh, and seem to die,

The fact is I've been thinking and thinking for a subject, but I've been unable to recall anything) but upon having very much acquainted myself with that grievance, I think I shall be able to write a subject. I have exhausted my resources by writing about my little dog. This makes one better than the first. I could tell a pretty little medical story about Rhino but what? I am to be favored if only Miss Leach will tell me for Being or what shall I say. Laggards among Mendelssohn's wonders if I get a teacher at Spring Hill to write a composition on it. Why do we go to San Juan

The deserted dwelling

For fear in the edge of the woods skirting a beautiful little Village, May be seen another house, which at an outward glance presents signs of its being deserted. And if, with a view to ascertain matters and doors just ready to tumble down, they proceed to it deserted. Their suspicions would immediately be confirmed on stepping over the threshold. The boards creak & rock under their feet and the dog to catch sight of something that would be after it. Some Indian weed, dying to take through the glass, the house is reached from each of the four sides by a door and also the ground around it is the same. Some of the doors hang on a single hinge and the Boards by which the window was covered lie about on the ground. The deserted house of a former Village resembles in that Village, where they bury a little of its history. Perhaps once the happy home of a farmer his wife & three children. This day is a very pleasant day Sunday as I shall not get to be writing to day I was 16 years old last September 24 I shall not have to confess for 2 weeks I shall read the Bible to day and kneel in the family prayer this morning

This is a very pleasant day another week has past and with it another Sabbath a day of rest and I shall pay my prayer this morning as my custom is but now it is in present. This is spring weather all Rebellion week has past and gone and it is last brought another Sabbath another day of rest as father is over the river to meeting to day was family is out at last along with his mother this will be the day as I shall read, "This is the beginning of another week as I have said my prayers and read as I shall keep this day holy father is at home to day and this closes the 4 sheets to end this month and this year I shall begin a new one and this will do for this year

Thursday Jan. 1st

This beginning of a new year finds me in good health and spirits and I am truly thankful for the many blessings I enjoy and for the prospect of still greater ones in the future. I hope and trust that I may be found more faithful in the discharge of my duties during the present year than I have been during the past. I will not write a resolution to pray more than I have done but will pray as I have said in my prayers. I will write a little every day and will not pray to day if I can help it less than 24 hours this is the beginning of another Sabath I shall not pray to day but go to meeting to day. Father is again to meeting to day I shall pray twice to day. Father is reading about the movements of the United States army and navy. I should think it would be a sad case of suffering if that is the case. I do not believe that they can whip the rebels that it is a very foolish plan. Grant is going out west in the spring. Father is going out west in the spring of third not I shall go in Summer or in the Fall this world is full to day as Ends this 24 hours I shall not write no more on this page

Wait for me, Mother.

Wait for me, Mother — I see you wait
Beneath the open door,
Where the light long archway fronts me.
What moment will you cease to be
Longer watcher! oh, the yearning eyes
You made of living stars
Will cease to fill the dusk of night
And you will be with me, mother.

I have loved you forever a little while,
With ignorant, hard-mouthed blind love,
Selfish when pain was far,
And that you have your day behind.
You will wait for me yet a little while,
Though I am late.
I shall come, I shall come,
After I am free of this long day's work
Of smoothing hard days for men,
Mother! pain has taught me little
Save this thing only
All I touch I make for you
Wait for me, Mother, as the night
Waits for the morning.
And I will come to you
Just as the dawn treads softly
Through the sleeping fields.

THE HORN

O Lord The Ocean Is Thine
We are on the Deep Sea
Thy strength with all its fury
Awaits Thine upon the Land
Let us think of our homes & Children
Thou Canst still the storm
Thou that bids the sun rise & set
Come to us
We are on the Deep Sea
Help from heaven to us

The Maiden's grave

I remember the night it was stormy and wet
And dismal dark the dark Hare
The sun & the sleet darkit And heavy did beat
On the maidens milky day grave.

2

I remember it was down in a lakeside dale
And there to a lonely bier
When the wild winds rale around the maidens
As they sought for the maidens grave

3

I remember how slowly the Bears Head
Climbed and "Was the Lark" Khat Thy-gate
As they rested their load mates last abode
And gazed on the maidens grave.

4

I remember "no Sabbath broke the night
As the keeps to the watch the grave
When the wild birds shriek and the hopless heart
As it sunk in the maidens grave.

5

I remember "a Tear that slowly rolled down
The cheek of a maiden bright
It fell on the Sod but soon was dried
As it sunk in the maidens grave.

6

But on his lone bed the wild briers keep
And the wild flowers tearfully weep
The Robin Redbreast and the Linnet shall sing
On the maidens silent grave.

I must leave the lady sweet
Moyth shall wast Before we meet
Winds are fare and sails are spread
Anchors leave their ocean bead
Ere this shining day grow dark
Skies shall gird my shoreless bark
Through this tears O lady mine
Read thy lovers parting line

2

When the first sad sun shall set
Thou shalt tear thy locks of jet
When the morning star shall rise
Thou shalt wake with weeping eyes
When the second sun goes down
Thou more tranquil shalt be grown
Caught too well that wild despair
Dims thy eyes and spoils thy hair

3

All the first night wak
Thou shalt wear a smiling cheek
At the first months second half
Thou shalt once attempt to laugh
Then in Pickwick thou shalt dip
Till at last in sorrows spite
Samuel makes thee laugh outright

4

While the first seven mornings last
Round thy Chamber bolted fast
Many a youth shall fume and pout
Hoping the girl thus always out
While the second week goes round
Vainly shall they ring and sound
When the third week shall begin
Martha let the Creature in

5

Thou once more the flattering throng
Round thee flock with smile and song.
But thy lips unmoved as yet
Lisp, Thou can't forget
Thou for ever will continue

The Drowned Sailor.

The daylight from heaven had just disappeared,
Beneath the wild foaming waters which the ship cleared.
While hovered a moment the mariner's image
The waters closed over him with a mild rushing glare.

The waters closed over him no more was he seen,
He sank in the waters to bright and to green,
He took not his sleep in the dark wave,
And the mark guides the mariner to the boat sailors grave.

On board he was charged and never kind hearted
Beloved by his shipmates was married since departed
But his soul is at rest up to God in the heaven
And all friends and parents his absence to mourn.

No more shall his hand guide the helm of the barge
Through the wild waves & waters so dreary and dark,
But his spirit shall sing to his God on high,
While waves o'er his ocean bed shall swell to the skies.

Ah, this was a warning this suddenly end.
Such other seamen his things to mind
To God who is willing and able to save,
The soul, though the body should sink in the wave.

He left friends and parents and his native home
On the cold foreign seas a Sailor to roam.
He fell overboard, no power could save,
His body now lies underneath the cold wave
